

Method for obtaining structural steel contains carbon, silicon, manganese, and iron as base, which involves alloying steel during the smelting process with nanoscale silicon carbide powder in a quantity of 2-3 wt.%.