

Screw system for transporting blood and its components, made in the form of a tube, which is clamped on both sides by left- and right-handed screws, which are driven by an electric drive, the frequency of which is regulated by a frequency converter via a computer. Wherein, at the points where the tube is clamped, the edges of the left- and right-handed screws are precisely aligned opposite each other.