

Screw conveyor consists of a housing containing a screw, which is divided into two sections at the intake part. In addition to this, the blades of the upper section of the airscrew are rigidly attached to its shaft, while the blades of the lower section are mounted so that they can oscillate relative to the airscrew axis.