

Condensation method of obtaining water from atmospheric air with regenerative cooling includes the steps of sucking in atmospheric air. It is cooled to the condensation temperature, collecting condensate and discharging the exhaust air. The air is cooled using a refrigeration machine, the condenser of which is located outside the cooling chamber to prevent heating.