

Land reclamation method includes placing rock material on disturbed surface, leveling and forming fertile soil layer, and laying base of clay, followed by sand, potentially fertile rock, and black soil, wherein leveled surface of quarry field is covered with anthropogenous rock formed from medium-loamy and light granulometric composition, achieved by technological mixing of rocks, followed by application of fertile soil layer with a thickness of at least 9 cm and humus content of at least 1.3...2.6%.