

Rubber vibration isolator is made in the form of a hollow truncated hemisphere made of elastomeric material. Wherein the vibration isolator wall is made with a variable thickness along the height of the profile, while in the upper part of the shell the wall thickness is smaller than in its lateral part, which ensures an increase in shear stiffness in the process of axial compression and the formation of a nonlinear stiffness characteristic.