

Combined rice cultivation system features a pumping station, an irrigation network, a drainage and outlet network, and hydraulic work. The distribution piping of the irrigation network is connected to the pumping station at the irrigation source and to the field piping, which, in turn, are equipped with water outlets for supplying water to the irrigation ditches, while the drainage and outlet network is connected to the main outlet channel, which, via storage basin located before the pumping station, is connected to it.