

Wind turbine consists of a rotor containing parallel cross-members, in the trunnions of which blades of aerodynamic shape are fixed. The rotor is placed horizontally. The blades are attached to the cross-members in such a way that the plane of the blade passes through the axis of the cross-member, ensuring the optimal angle of attack for a given blade profile.