

Method for manufacturing electrical energy consists in burning hydrocarbon fuel, resulting in a formation of a working fluid, energy of which drives a machine that manufactures electrical energy. Fuel combustion products harmful to the environment, in particular carbon dioxide, are separated and neutralized by chemical conversion into an environmentally friendly product.