

Method for determining viability of winter cereal field crops involves collecting soil cores with plants, their cultivation in laboratory conditions and counting live and dead plants. In early spring, microgreenhouses measuring $50 \times 50 \times 20$ cm are placed on winter grain crop fields. After six to twelve days, the number of living and dead plants is counted directly in the field.