

Train electrical energy recovery system consists of electric motors of the electric locomotive and a supercapacitor energy storage system. Each train car is equipped with an electric generator electrically connected to the storage unit, and each car also has a flywheel kinematically connected to the electric generator and the car wheels.