

Device for measuring surface runoff value includes a hydrological flume equipped with flow measurement instruments. The hydrological flume consists of a water-receiving flume for collecting atmospheric precipitation and artificial rain, and a water-collecting flume for collecting surface runoff. The flumes are rigidly connected along their perimeter and installed with the lower edge of the water-collecting flume buried in the ground.