

Seed mixture separator consists of a conical screening surface formed by threads stretched over rings of various diameters, a drive mechanism, a feeding device, and receptacles for the separated products. One of the rings is mounted so that it can rotate and shift relative to the separator's longitudinal axis, and is also spring-loaded relative to this axis.