

Method for testing rescuers' protective clothing involves heating oil and then bringing it into contact with a sample of the protective clothing. To secure the sample for further testing, a fixture with a handle is used that mimics the shape of a knee or elbow.