

Method for inserting peripheral intravenous catheter in dogs and cats involves forming a channel in the skin with subsequent insertion of the catheter into the venous bed and its fixation. The channel is formed by puncturing the skin with a disposable lancet without making a skin incision.