Double zone crusher with combined grinding elements in working parts consists of a screen, a shaft, and a rotor with working parts—in the form of impact plates—hinged to it. An intermediate screen separates an additional working zone with a rotor equipped with working elements in the form of hinged disc holders with a corrugated surface, arranged in a staggered pattern so that they can rotate and press against the screen.