

Heat and mass transfer device nozzle is shaped like a single-cavity hyperboloid with open bases. The open bases are formed by rings connected to one another with straight rods, evenly spaced in the circumferential direction and inclined toward the longitudinal axis of the single-cavity hyperboloid in opposite directions, forming a skeletal structure.