

Vibrating jaw crusher consists of a housing, elastic elements, inclined lower and upper jaws, a vibrator mounted on the upper jaw, and a suspension shaft for the upper jaw. The crusher housing consists of two blocks mounted so that they can be rotated using a clamping device; grooves are machined into the horizontal opposing surfaces of the blocks, parallel to the upper jaw suspension shaft, in which a cylindrical element is housed.