

Method for producing a carrier for microorganisms used in agricultural biopreparations involves granulating carrier mixtures at temperatures up to $\approx 100^{\circ}\text{C}$. Granules made from Black Sea algae are used as the carrier, and granulation is carried out at a temperature of $38\text{--}40^{\circ}\text{C}$.