

Method for internal combustion engine diagnostics involves procedures to assess the operational condition of internal combustion engines and identify any problems, if present. Vibration of cylinder block is measured, and the resulting spectrum of harmonic vibrations is compared with a reference spectrum to detect any deviations in its operation.