

Method for obtaining mesenchymal stem cells with high proliferative activity from bone marrow of two-day-old cattle femur bones after slaughter involves collecting bone marrow from the animal. After slaughter, femur bones are treated with 70% alcohol solution. Then, within 3 days after slaughter, bone is cut open using sterile saw, and biomaterial is collected into sterile test tube for subsequent cultivation under sterile conditions.