

Culvert for underground water supply and drainage networks consists of box-shaped underground structure with vertical side walls and bottom, on the surface of which water pipe or sewer pipe is laid, where reinforced concrete floor slabs rest on top of side walls, and space above these slabs within the trench is filled with compacted backfill soil. Walls and bottom are constructed from soil-cement elements arranged so that they partially overlap one another.