

Device for determining water flow from water supply networks consists of a housing equipped with a pressure gauge and Bohdanov connection heads. The housing is made in the form of a straight circular cylinder, on the side surface of which an additional ring is mounted, the internal volume of which is connected to the housing via small-diameter holes and the pressure gauge. Bohdanov connection heads are located at the ends.