

Packaging comprising a container and a packaging wrapper formed from a flexible blank includes two end sections that, when assembled, are secured to one another to form a closed contour, creating at least the upper and lower parts of the packaging wrapper, which are arranged parallel to one another, with the lower part holding at least one container. The upper part of the packaging wrap and the bottom of the container are equipped with fastening elements designed to be connected to one another for stacking the packages.