

Method for detecting viruses in biological material from animals involves steps that bind the virus to specific antibodies and identify the virus in the absence of cytopathic effects in cell culture. The neutralization reaction is performed using a cell suspension.